Q: How can I write to an inmate?

A: There are two ways to write to an inmate, by U.S. Post Service and by email. Inmates may receive unlimited mail. For security reasons, only letters will be accepted. Cards and photos will not be accepted. Incoming mail will be opened and inspected. Non-privileged (non-legal) letters must be written on standard plain white paper (either lined or unlined) free from artwork, drawings and ink blots. Mail that does not conform to these standards will be returned to sender. Mail without complete return addresses will be destroyed consistent with existing policy.

You can email an inmate by visiting the Access Corrections website (formerly known as Cybersuite), at <https://www.accesscorrections.com> and registering to setup an account. This requires that you have an active email account. Once the account is setup you will add the inmate to your recipient list and then purchase message credits using a debit or credit card with a Visa or MasterCard logo and valid security code.

If you already have an account with Cybersuite for Secure Deposits, you do not need to create another account for Secure Email. Both services are offered within Access Corrections.
